But other dislocations and divisions of na tional industry have been occasioned by the Rebellien. In the first eleven months of 1861. England exported to this country only 72,042,-937 yards of cotton goods, value about $6,000. 000, against 193, 185, 568 yards in the same month of 1860, value $16,500,000. In 1859, the amount of cotton goods exported to this coutry was a tride greater than in 1860, so that if our imports of the same description of fab rice should be no greater this year than the last, England will have lost the sale to us at $20,000,000 of cotton goods alone in two years. Our abstinence from other articles of Britis manufacture, iron, steel, and hardware, has caused an even greater diminution of British industry, the total in eleven months being nearly reached an embarrassing pause, while with 10,000,000 at the South it has altogether ceased. The idea of a war with us to open Southern ports, to re-establish a maeem an absurdity too great for my same Government to contemplate. If the would

But the consumption of British manufactures is extending throughout the world more reptdly than it duninishes here. The Board of Trade returns afford conclusive evidence that, as our consumption diminishes, that of other countries increases. As England is peaceably cultivating outlets elsewhere, it would be extraordinary if here only she should determine to open them with cannon. India consumed more than seven times as much of her many factures as we do; Brazil twice as mush; Turkey and China more than four times at
